Getches-Green Natural Resources and Environmental Law Clinic

Founded in 1978, the Getches-Green Natural Resources and Environmental Law Clinic is one of the country's first environmental law clinics. Originally, Clinic students worked under the supervision of staff attorneys at the National Wildlife Federation. In 2010, the Clinic moved in house to the Law School, where the Clinic continues its mission of training future attorneys through the representation of clients in environmental cases.

The clinical faculty member is responsible for developing a docket of projects dealing with natural resources, energy, and environmental law issues. The clinical faculty member also has primary responsibility for supervising students in their case or project work, and for organizing and teaching a companion clinical seminar. The clinical faculty member will also work closely with the Getches-Wilkinson Center and the doctrinal faculty members who teach environmental law and related subjects. The clinical faculty member is expected to become an active member of the natural resources law community and develop relationships with experts, attorneys, and relevant organizations. This is a full-time academic year position. Rank and appointment classification will depend on qualifications and experience.

Candidates must have a JD degree and a minimum of five years of relevant practical experience. Teaching experience is strongly preferred. Candidates must be licensed to practice law in at least one state and be eligible to sit either for the Colorado bar or waive admission into Colorado.
